Superpowers plan talks on Mideast U.S., Soviets to exchange views

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States and the Soviet Union will sit down to discuss the Middle East next week, but U.S. officials tried Wednesday to dampen expectations in advance by insisting they expect no change in Soviet policy.

Nevertheless, the two-day session in Vienna beginning Tuesday represents an increase in the dialogue on such trouble spots as Afghanistan, southern Lebanon, the Iran-Iraq war and the Arab-Israeli conflict.

"These talks should not be seen as negotiations," State Department spokesman Bernard Kalb cautioned after announcing the discussions.

ongoing effort to engage the Soviets in the full agenda of issues, including regional questions, human rights and bilateral issues as well as arms control," Kalb said. Arms control negotiations are set to resume next month in Geneva.

The U.S. delegation will be led by Richard Lugar, Indiana's secretary of state for the Near East. The Soviet team will be led by Vladimir P. Polyakov, Murphy's counterpart in the Soviet foreign ministry.

"The discussions are to contribute to our own mutual understanding of those problems and are part of our countries," Reagan said. "There's some reason to believe that we can straighten out some things — trade matters."

Kalb said the objective of the session was to "help avoid miscalculation and to reduce the potential risk of U.S.-Soviet confrontation."

The spokesman also confirmed that Soviet Ambassador Anatoly Dobrynin met for an hour with Secretary of State George P. Shultz at the State Department. But he would not say what they talked about.

Reagan asked about the reported agreement between PLO chief Yasir Arafat and Jordan's King Hussein on a so-called "framework for peace," replied: "It seems as if some progress has been made . . . So, we're being optimistic about it."

But Reagan said the administration would not yet be in "support" of holding an international conference on the Middle East, which Israel also opposes. Some reports say such a conference is part of the "framework" Hussein and Arafat devised for dealing with the Palestinian problem.

The Soviets generally side with the Arabs against Israel and have no diplomatic relations with Jerusalem.

U.S. officials were not available to answer the question.

They are merely an exchange of views," he said. "They do not represent any change in the U.S. position regarding issues affecting the region, nor do we expect them to result in changes in Soviet positions."

The U.S. delegation will be led by Richard Lugar, Indiana's secretary of state for the Near East. The Soviet team will be led by Vladimir P. Polyakov, Murphy's counterpart in the Soviet foreign ministry.

"The discussions are to contribute to our own mutual understanding of those problems and are part of our

Elections still on; ASBYU will change

By LAURA SAVINI
University Staff Writer

The March ASBYU elections will take place as scheduled, but university administration has said in a formal statement that there will be a change in the structure of the ASBYU system.

Executive Vice President Wm. Rolfe Kerr said in the statement, on behalf of the university administration, "ASBYU, in its present form, is not serving student needs as well as it could."

Ryan Thomas, ASBYU administrative adviser, said the candidates elected will hold their positions for the entire year. "Changes will be made after further administrative consideration," he said.

The current office holders have such large demands on their time that the position is interfering with their academic careers, Kerr said.

"Student involvement and representation are not facilitated in the most meaningful ways," he said.

ASBYU President Rob Miller said, "Each officer has too many responsibilities. There is too much power given to too few people. More people should be involved."

"There are 13 people running the whole show. They try to run the office, do well in their classes and have a social life at the same time. It is a lot of work," Miller said.

The structure and objectives of ASBYU need to be redefined, Kerr said, for the benefit of the officers and the student body.

He said, "As a complement to its emphasis on academic matters, BYU recognizes social, church, cultural and student government activities as vital functions for the balanced development of the total person."

It is the intent of the university that all institutional organizations and activities be consistent with and supportive of its educational objectives," Kerr said.

After reviewing the ASBYU programs, the administration found that not all of the programs meet the objectives and decided that redefinition is needed, he said.

An improved system can be devised which will be more representative of and accountable to the students, and at the same time, be less damaging academically to the officers, Kerr said.

"It is anticipated that the process will be completed by the first of the calendar year with changes fully implemented by April of 1986," he said.

The nature and method of redefining, he said, along with options for implementation, will be determined after additional information has been obtained from all interested members of the university community.

Anyone interested in offering his or her opinions should contact the Student Life office, 380 SWKT, the Student Programs office, 329 ELWC, or ASBYU on the 4th floor, ELWC.

Emery may sue federal agency

By STEVEN J. HANSEN
Senior Reporter

Attorneys for Emery Mining Corp. were deliberating Wednesday the question of whether to file a law suit against the Mine, Health and Safety Administration in an effort to gain admittance to formal interview sessions conducted by the federal agency.

Wednesday's success story for the company did not cushion the federal agency's decision to ban the company from the witness questioning process of the investigation into the mine disaster, which killed 27 people. Company representatives might have entered the mine, but a preliminary inquiry is keeping officials out of the proceedings.

Acting on an injunction issued Monday, MSHA excused the mining company to avoid allowing reporters into the proceedings. "We are sympathetic with the company's situation, but we made a decision, and we need to get on with the investigation," said Katherine Snyder, spokeswoman for Emery.

"We included as many of the origin-

Team of rescue workers goes into Wilberg Mine

A team of rescue workers entered the Wilberg Mine Wednesday on the first leg of a mission to retrieve the bodies of miners killed in a fire there in December.

Nearly two months after seals on the mine's entrances were clamped shut, workers managed to lower toxic carbon monoxide levels and begin a trek under 2,000 feet of mountain. "About noon we got a team in the mine," said Bob Henri, spokesman for Emery.

The rescue team's first step is to move in 300 to 400 feet and then expand four new seals and then al parties that the injunction would allow," she said.

The injunction, by U.S. District Judge David K. Winder, required MSHA to include a pool reporter and a pool camera and microphone during the questioning or exclude any "interested parties" except representatives from the United Mine Workers union, the Utah Industrial Commission, witnesses' attorneys and the agency.

Since the mining company falls in the category of "interested party," it will be excluded, unless a suit is filed and the judge sides with Emery.

Already the company has sent a letter expressing disapproval to MSHA. Emery officials are protesting their exclusion since the union will be privy to the questioning. Emery has a right and a duty to attend the proceedings, said W.L. Zeller, vice-president of the company.

The officials of the company said their participation in the questioning is necessary to ensure prevention of further incidents, like the one that closed the mine 19. Yet, for all intents and purposes, Emery officials requested MSHA to either include them or exclude the union representatives.

In the meantime, the agency will take on the questioning on Monday where it left off when a temporary restraining order suspended the hearings for nearly three weeks.

Until the Jan. 24 restraining order was enacted, Emery officials enjoyed the privilege of actively participating in the investigation. However, a complaint by the Professional Society of Journalists and 18 other news agencies curtailed the company's sphere of influence when MSHA opted to strip Emery of its privileges.

From the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and that independent parties acted on their behalf.

Jack Christianson, who has studied the effects of music on listeners, said residents should have thought how LDS Church President Spencer W. Kimball and the Lord would have voted. "This was an uneducated vote. I hope the kids take the time to really look at this."

Christianson said because of the publicity this issue has received, he has been invited to appear on a People's Wish, talk show, and has been contacted by People Magazine, Entertainment Tonight and several other news organizations.

Raintree residents were given a letter Wednesday by the management which asked them to express their feelings about MTV, said manager, Hyde Taylor.

The results of the survey will be examined before a decision is made on whether to bring the matter to a wider audience.

Widener, who is also bishop of one of the Raintree wards, said he will not give up his fight against pornography and will continue to address his concerns to members of his ward and family.

Cable lovers vote 'Yes' for MTV

By CRAIG SHIELDS
University Staff Writer

The voters are in and MTV supporters have been declared victorious, but the jury is still out on whether anything has been settled.

Carriage Cove residents voted Wednesday to keep MTV, 221-167, with 88 tenants declining to cast votes. Leo Weidner, part owner of Carriage Cove, said he was disappointed with the outcome.

"Two-hundred and twenty-one kids voted for something they really wanted nothing else," he said. "I do not think we were defeated, because we alerted church leaders, parents and the kids to what is really on television today," Weidner said.

Because of the vote, he said he learned it is not enough to tell kids not to do something, but that you have to tell them why.

Weidner said he was disappointed that so many people did not vote. "I think the vocal minority was instrumental in persuading the outcome," he said.

Roll Williams, a senior from North Hollywood, Calif., majoring in English, led the protest and said he was just glad tenants were given the opportunity to voice their opinion.

The question still hangs as to whether Carriage Cove will ever "get its MTV." According to Weidner, the complex must now get a legal cable hookup, which will involve some cost. He said this may cause an increase in rent.

After the complex is legally hooked up, a committee will poll residents to determine which cable stations they prefer. MTV may lose out in the poll, he said.

"We are glad that it was finally settled," said Don Bridges, vice president of corporate communications at MTV. "We are thankful for the support that was shown by the residents."

Bridges said MTV has a social as well as an entertainment responsibility in determining its programming. MTV will not show videos that show nudity, explicit sex, illegal use of drugs or excessive use of profanity.

The dispute received a lot of attention from the media, he said. One example came from The New York Post, which ran the headline, "Church Thou shall not view sexy MTV."

Bridges said he was aware this had nothing to do

Cartoonist Gary Trudeau calls it "the most extraordinary junket in the history of Congress," but Sen. Jake Garn isn't offended by the down-to-earth humor about his impending space shuttle trip.

"That (criticism) was raised almost from the moment he was asked to entertain the possibility of a flight," said Bill Hendrix, Garn's press secretary.

Garn has seen the comic strip, "Doonesbury," and his wife, Jane Pauley, who interviewed Garn last week, both called the senator a "space sickness specialist."

Hendrix said, "They're ganging up on him."

In Tuesday's installment of the strip, Trudeau tells readers that many people feel your trip is the most extraordinary junket in the history of Congress.

The reporter suggests that a poet or essayist would be better able to tell the public about space since Garn, like many members of Congress, would have his staff write the speeches about the flight.

Hendrix said that won't happen.

"Anybody who knows Jake Garn knows that he never follows a text," even if his staff has one prepared. "It wouldn't matter what we wrote — Jake Garn speaks for himself," he said.

Wednesday's strip returned to the news that "Barfing Jake Garn, a man and his mission," Hendrix says as a roll of toilet paper floats by.

1 killed, 13 injured in highway pile-up

BOUNTIFUL, Utah (AP) — One woman was killed and 13 people were injured during a foggy pile-up of nearly 40 vehicles near Interstate 15's Beek Street overpass Wednesday, the Utah Highway Patrol said.

UHP Sgt. Doug Slugowski said the woman, who was not immediately identified, died of injuries sustained in the crash.

He said law enforcement officials were looking for the driver of a vehicle which left the scene of the accident, which occurred in heavy fog shortly after noon.

He said the driver of the vehicle is thought to have come into a fog bank and slowed down, causing autos behind to crash.

Manila hotel blaze kills 4 Americans

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Hundreds of firefighters battled a blaze that swept through one of Manila's largest luxury hotels, for a second night Wednesday. At least 24 people, including four Americans, died.

"This is going to take the whole night," said Col. Alfredo Garcia, area fire supervisor, estimating the hundreds of firemen on the scene.

Twenty-four hours after the fire started on the hotel's second floor, smoke continued to pour out of upper-floor windows on one wing of the 11-story, 464-room bayside hotel.

One fire official, Col. Rodolfo Villavicencio, said the death toll could double or triple by the time the fire finally was extinguished and the building was thoroughly searched.

The cause of the fire was not yet known, but Villavicencio said "it may have been arson."

Possible dump site may be dangerous

WASHINGTON (AP) — An environmental group said one of the top three sites selected as the possible location for the nation's first permanent nuclear waste dump should be dropped from further consideration.

The Washington, D.C.-based Health and Energy Institute said Wednesday the solidified lava — or basalt — rock at the Hanford Nuclear Reservation in Washington is prone to possible high temperatures, underground water movement, explosive methane gas and the potential for stress-caused "rock bursting" in the formation.

Government shops for phone company

WASHINGTON (AP) — The federal government, the world's largest long-distance telephone customer, started shopping Wednesday for $4.2 billion worth of service by opening the bidding process for a contract that will go to one — and only one — vendor.

The General Services Administration, the federal government's purchasing office, asked telephone executives to come up with a plan for replacing the 22-year-old Federal Telecommunications System, essentially provided by the American Telephone & Telegraph Co.

Children learn to read as early as 12 months

By SHERRI SPRUANCE

University Staff Writer

Children can learn to read as soon as they learn to process language, says a BYU professor.

Dr. Harvey B. Black, a professor of instructional sciences and director of the Print Fluency research project for the past three years, said a child can learn to read as early as 12 months old.

It is important for the parent to actively listen to the wants determined by their child.

At first, the parent is encouraged to hold the child and read to him or her. Later, the parent can encourage the child to read with him or her.

Another method is to place words on objects in the home, he said, so the child becomes familiar with the words and objects they represent.

Parents also can have the child make a book of pictures with matching words, encouraging both an interest in books and creativity.

Some critics say teaching children to read at such an early age puts too much pressure on them to excel, feeling the early years should be reserved for play and exploration.

"If the teacher is done right, it gives children one more thing to play with and to explore," he said.

The teacher is during the early years the child develops his or her strongest preferences.

At first, only short spaces of time should be spent reading. The child will probably be three or four years old before he or she will spend more than 15 minutes at one sitting, he said.

Most children want to learn and are language-oriented at this stage of their lives, although some may need an incentive, Black said.

"Some children may need a little reward for their effort at first, but we don't think it should last more than two or three weeks," he said. "The ultimate goal is for children to want to read for enjoyment."

The emphasis should be on fun and learning, with the phonetic part of reading being secondary, he said.

Teaching the child to read can be a beneficial experience for the parent too, Black said, giving them an opportunity to spend time with the child in a non-confrontational way.

Some children are more motivated to learn than others, Black said he knew of a black child in Atlanta who came from a family in which learning wasn't encouraged. He got the child to read from watching television commercials and reading what was printed on the screen with the spoken one.

"Parents have to be committed to teaching the child to read whether they are motivated or not," he said. "It takes a lot of time and can be discouraging."

Some children learn more than they admit. Sometimes the child does not see any reason to show the parent what he or she knows, he said.

The parent can have a great effect on the child's learning by playing educational "games" with them because the child appreciates the special attention, he said.

Black, who started his work when he observed the different learning patterns of his own children, is currently teaching reading tips to parents through workshops in the Continuing Education Department and Education Week programs.

Brothers receive presidential medal

Four brothers, Robert H., Frederick R., John N. and G. Marion Hinckley, received the BYU Presidential Medal Thursday in Ogden.

The brothers are the surviving members of the family of Edwin S. and Adeline Hinckley. They established the Hinckley scholarship at BYU in 1954 in honor of their father.

"BYU has no greater contributors than the Hinckley brothers," said Leroy Gibbons, director of BYU's Foundation. "They have contributed not only of their financial resources but of their knowledge and their service as well."

He said the presidential medal is bestowed annually by President Jeffrey R. Holland as a personal award to people who have served the university or made charitable gifts to BYU.

Robert H. Hinckley served as vice president and director of American Broadcasting Company, of which he was one of the founders. He also served in the Roosevelt and Truman administrations as chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Authority and as assistant secretary of Commerce for Air.

Frederick "Fritz" Hinckley was an all-conference player for the 1925 BYU football team. He started the American Paper and Supply Company in 1939 and is a past president of the BYU Alumni Association.

John N. Hinckley is an inventor of food and dairy products and pumps and founder of Hinckley Pump Corporation, an international pump manufacturer.

G. Marion Hinckley has been a dairy farmer in Provo for more than 50 years. He has served as Provo City mayor and as a Utah County commissioner.

Former Hinckley Scholars have been Rex E. Lee, the former dean of the BYU Law School and currently the Solicitor General of the United States; Roger Porter, special assistant to President Reagan; and President Holland.

Local men file suit against Provo police

Two police officers are awaiting a federal trial hearing on a recently filed suit by two Utah County men who claimed they were deprived of their civil rights in an arrest last March.

The suit was filed in U.S. District Court against Provo Police Chief Steven Nielsen, officer Kenneth M. Valentine and 12 other licensed police officers. Attorneys representing Ross Cassidy of American Fork and David Meehan of Provo.

According to Provo City attorney, Glen J. Ellis, the police officers were on their way to the scene of a shooting at a country bar when the incident occurred. The officers pulled over a speeding car at 2 a.m. on 300 South, which they believed to be connected with the shooting.

The suit says Cassidy and Meehan were handcuffed and placed under arrest after they were forced to kneel and crawl backward at gunpoint. They say the police officers subjected them to illegal arrests, searches and false imprisonment.

The suit accused Nielsen and the officers of "negligent failure to properly train and control police officers at the scene."

Moot Court experience trains pre-law students

By LAURA SAVINI

The first undergraduate Moot Court competition was held February 6 to give students in-court experience. It was co-sponsored by the ASBYU attorney general's office, the honors student council and the law school association.

"We started the competition in the attorney general's office, so we could get more practical legal experience to use in the ASBYU court system," said Mark Asplund, ASBYU attorney general. "This also gives students an idea of what is going on in the law school."

To enter the competition students had to prepare written and oral briefs and present them before law school student judges that have gone through Moot competitions before, Asplund explained. The students are graded on their performance.

Stephen Lundwall, a sophomore from Ogden, Utah, majoring in English, emerged from the competition as "Best Oralist" and Sheldon Fisher, a junior from Ashland, Ore., majoring in economics, as "Best Brief." Each of the winners will receive a $50 prize.

"The honors program gave us (ASBYU attorney general's office) $100 in prize money for the winners," Larsen said.

Professor given award by peers

By TOD SANDERS
Senior Reporter

Dr. W. Steve Albrecht has been named the recipient of the 1984-85 Faculty Award by the School of Management.

Albrecht, an accounting professor at BYU, will be honored by his peers at a banquet Feb. 21, along with Emory O. Sondererger and J. Bonner Ritchie, both of whom were named recipients of the Exxon Teaching Excellence Award.

The award is given on the basis of meeting four criteria: professional service, publication, teaching and research.

Nominees for the award are nominated by their peers, and their department head completes the application. A School of Management committee, which includes representatives of each college in the school, then makes the final selection.

Albrecht is a Utah native and graduated from BYU Cum Laude with a bachelor's degree in accounting in 1967.

After graduation he worked for Touche Ross & Co. as a Certified Public Accountant before going on to obtain a master's degree and a doctorate at the University of Wisconsin, both of whom were named recipients of the Exxon Teaching Excellence Award.

Albrecht, an accounting professor at BYU, will be honored by his peers at a banquet Feb. 21, along with Emory O. Sondererger and J. Bonner Ritchie, both of whom were named recipients of the Exxon Teaching Excellence Award.

Albrecht received honors for teaching excellence a each of these institutions and has received numerous awards since coming to BYU, including the School of Accountancy Faculty Excellence Award and the Exxon Teaching Awards.

Albrecht is considered one of the leading authorities on white-collar crime and fraud in the United States. He has co-authored two books on the subject and two accounting textbooks.

For Albrecht the main enjoyment in teaching comes from the various roles a professor plays, especially the one-on-one contact with the students. "The mixture of interacting with bright students, the ability to convey what I like to do and the research makes for the best of all worlds," he said. "That mixture keeps life exciting."

Although he has received various offers to work in the professional world, he has spurned those offers in order to avail himself the flexibility teaching provides.

Albrecht said the most significant part of the award, which is the most distinguished faculty honor presented by the School of Management, is that it is awarded by his peers. "It is a nice award because you are nominated by your peers, and there are a lot of good faculty members to choose from," he said. "Being given the award by my peers and having it be given for productivity in various areas are the most satisfying aspects of the award."

Emory O. Sondererger and J. Bonner Ritchie were named the recipients of the Exxon Award. The award, sponsored by the Exxon Corporation, is given to recognize outstanding teaching efforts of School of Management faculty members.

Sondererger is a professor in the School of Accountancy, and Ritchie is a former chairman of the Department of Organizational Behavior and currently teaches in that department.

Students must follow parking lot standards

Out of the 400-450 students who appeal traffic tickets each semester, many said they were not aware of the time regulations imposed in various areas.

"It is the student's responsibility to be aware of the parking regulations," said assistant attorney general, Paul Ahlstrom. "Everyone who buys a parking ticket gets a pamphlet, but most don't read all the regulations."

The traffic regulations pamphlet states there is a $10 fine for those who park in restricted lots without a permit.

Most lots are regulated only until 4 p.m.; however, certain "A" lots are restricted until 8 p.m. These include "A" lots 3, located east of the HFAC building; 4, west of the new technology building; 9, located west of the CB; and 14, located north of the SFLC.

Children's lives changing radically

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's school population has changed radically in the past 15 years. There have been large increases in the number of children from broken homes and those living in poverty, an education analyst reported Wednesday.

Emily Feistritzer, director of the private National Center for Education Information, released a demographic report on America's 44 million elementary and secondary school students.

The report provides compelling evidence of the need to improve the nation's schools said Feistritzer, a former teacher-educator who publishes several Washington-based newsletters.

"The difference between American children of today, compared with those of 1970 . . . is nothing less than startling," according to the report, "Creating Our Children: Why We Need School Reform."

The study cites a wide range of statistics from the U.S. Bureau of the Census, the National Center for Education Statistics and other sources. Among them:

— One in five children now live in poverty; 23 percent of children under age 6 are poor.

— One in three children is being raised by a mother with no father in the home.

The number of households headed by females with no husband present has doubled since 1970 and tripled since 1960.

Cold weather causes worry over frostbite

By SUSAN GEIS
University Staff Writer

The recent grip of subzero temperatures in Utah Valley and the extended exposure of residents to freezing conditions has brought about new concern about the dangers of frostbite.

Frostbite is the result of extreme cold on the body and actual freezing of body tissues, according to Dr. Keith Hooker, head emergency room doctor for the McDonald Health Center at BYU and at Utah Valley Regional Medical Center.

Hooker said he is not aware of an increase in frostbite victims. When the weather gets colder, Utahns generally stay inside, he said, but people should be cautious.

Ears, noses, cheeks, feet and feet are most commonly affected by frostbite. Symptoms include tingling, numbness and pain. Affected areas will appear unnaturally white and may blister.

Hooker said frostbite is seen in humid or windy conditions where the natural heat surrounding the body is blown away, leaving the body unprotected from the cold.

"You generally see frostbite in two kinds of people," Hooker said. "Those who are experienced in the outdoors and are involved in some kind of accident, or those who are inexperienced and not equipped for cold weather."

The best way to thaw a frostbitten area, Hooker said, is to wrap it in warm blankets or throw it gradually into warm water — about 105 degrees. Rubbing a frozen area with snow or ice may cause further damage to the tissue.

Hooker said the most important thing is to thaw a frozen body part only once. "Don't thaw it if there is any danger of refreezing," he said. "If an area is thawed more than once, you will have nothing but a bag of mush."

If you're in danger of refreezing exists, it's best to keep the part on ice until safety is reached. Body tissue is preserved by the cold, Hooker said.

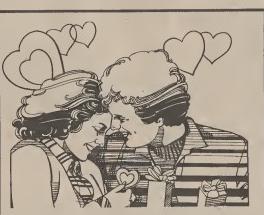

The best cure for frostbite is prevention. "Once you get cold, stop. When you can't feel anything you're in trouble," he said.

The best way to prevent frostbite is to dress properly for winter weather. Hooker recommends the layering of clothing.

"It's better to wear something loose and bulky to keep you warm and then something on top that will keep out wind and water," he said.

Hooker suggests synthetics like nylon or gortex that will hold heat but will let moisture out. Wool is also recommended for extended exposure to cold weather. Wool will keep you warm even when it's wet, he said. "Cotton is rotten," Hooker said. "Cotton is thin; it absorbs water and will cut right through it."

Because the feet are farthest from the heart and closest to the snow and ice, they are especially vulnerable to frostbite. Experts recommend loose, but well-fitted shoes or boots, preferably fitted by an expert. Shoes that are too tight do not allow for layering and interfere with proper circulation.

Student 'illuminates' readers with publication of second book

By SHERILL SPRUANCE
University Staff Writer

Although term papers are enough writing for most collegians, one BYU student has just published his second book.

Brad Wilcox, a senior from Provo majoring in elementary education, has finished the book, "Watts Under Your Bushel?" He describes the book as both inspirational and down-to-earth.

The book is a collection of his own personal experiences and the experiences of others. He said the book is intended to be a means of encouraging others to let their light shine.

"I decided to write the book when I noticed there were a lot of my friends returning from their missions and flickering out," he said. "I also noticed there were people who seemed to be afraid to let their light shine in the first place."

He said he thought it would be a good idea to write a book to encourage both types of people.

The book comprises three sections. The first, entitled "Coming Out With Your Light Shining," encourages those people who do not think they have any inner light. It is intended to show people that everyone has something to shine about, he said.

The second section is called "Shining Out Without Burning Out." This section provides practical suggestions on how to influence others for good and tells how to react with someone who doesn't want to be influenced.

The last section is entitled "Staying Out Without Burning Out." This part is directed at those people who have learned to shine but are having a hard time keeping it up, he said. It also encourages those whose light goes on and off to help them keep a steady glow.

"I wrote this book because I think we influence others is one of the most important things we do," he said. "I feel it was important to encourage others to influence people for good."

Wilcox got started with his writing career when he was still in high school. His English teacher assigned the class to enter a writing contest in Guideposts magazine.

"The purpose of the contest was to write an inspirational story," he said. "The teacher thought it would be a natural assignment for us because, being LDS, we are supposed to have a lot of inspirational experiences."

He won first place in the contest. Later, he had some stories published in the New Era.

"I submitted some stories to the magazine, but for a long time I was too scared to enter a New Era contest," Wilcox said. "It would be nice if they did not like my story, but I did not want to take a chance on entering a contest and losing."

One day he received a call from the publisher of Bookcraft, who challenged him to write a book. The publisher thought a book by a young person for young people would be a good idea, Wilcox said.

"He challenged me to try, but I had no idea what to write about," he said. "My mother suggested maybe I could write a book on trying."

Wilcox's first book, "The Super Barbie Success Book," was so popular it sold out. It has recently been re-released for Christian bookstores.

"We had to take out all references to The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints to make it acceptable for Christian bookstores," he said. He and the publishers made such changes in the text as replacing the words "ward choir" with "church choir" and taking out all references to Utah.

"Even on the back of the book they wrote that I grew up in a valley in the Rocky Mountains instead of making a direct reference to Provo," he said.

He has had his book released on a national Christian market like the first one, he said. This book was written after his mission and is too LDS-related.

"I wanted to write a book with a more eternal focus this time," he said. "Letting your light shine is a commandment."

Wilcox said his favorite chapter in his new book is chapter five. It deals with doubts, which are something everyone experiences, he said. They are not a sign of weakness but can be a sign of growth if the person is willing to do something about them.

"The book is not a preaching book because I am not in the position to preach," he said.

"I am not a Paul H. Dunn, but I realized I had something to say, wrote what I wanted to say, and I hope others can relate to my experiences and gain something from them," Wilcox added.

He said he has received letters from fans who have thanked him for writing the books. Sometimes, however, the attention can get embarrassing.

"One time I went into the testing center to take a test I hadn't studied for," he said. "The girl at the desk recognized me and asked if I had won now since she liked my book. I was really afraid she would be the one to grade my test after I was finished and it would ruin her image of me."

When teachers find out he has written books, he said it puts pressure on him to be perfect. He said he worries more about teachers finding mistakes in his books than he does about being perfect.

opened in 1979.

The selection process for the high school's new principal was a topic of discussion at Tuesday's Board of Education meeting.

Superintendent John Bennion's proposed selection process included advertising of the position opening, accepting applications, a seven-step screening process and a Board of Education review.

The screening process includes application screening and review by district administrators, input by a Timpview High School committee, interviews with a district team and the school committee, reading of position descriptions, search of files, interview of candidates and a final recommendation by the Board of Education.

After some discussion, it was determined that members of the board should maintain some involvement in the selection process through a board discussion and review of final candidates.

Condie has been a part of the education profession for 33 years and has been Timpview's principal since it

Space capsule full of ashes to orbit earth

WASHINGTON (AP) — For $3,900, about the price of an upscale funeral with casket, vault and tombstone, a Florida firm will help you send the ashes of a loved one whirling around Earth.

The ashes will stay up for eternity, or 63 million years, whichever comes first.

A 300-pound capsule that could hold the ashes of as many as 10,320 people is planned for early 1986 or early 1987 aboard a converted Earth stage Conestoga rocket. The capsule will have a highly reflective outer skin, making it visible on clear nights as a comet to those left behind.

The venture received the blessings of the Reagan administration. The agency's "exceptional response" to the student's urging of more commercialization of space.

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Polish security police detained seven prominent Solidarity activists Wednesday after raiding a meeting in a Gdansk apartment. Solidarity leader Lech Walesa was attending the meeting, an aide said.

Walesa was released immediately after about 20 plainclothes and uniformed policemen forced their way into an apartment in the Baltic port city to break up the meeting of Solidarity leaders, said Grzegorz Grzelak, a Walesa aide.

In a cooperative effort between Utah Valley hospitals to decrease auto-related injuries to children, the Utah Valley Regional Medical Center now gives free infant car seats to maternity patients before they leave the hospital.

The program, which started Feb. 1, enables all patients who prepay hospital fees or who have insurance verification, to receive a certificate redeemable for a car seat for their newborn child.

"This (improper restraint while in the car) is the number one cause of injury in children," said Chris Coons, hospital marketing director. "We have a commitment to preventive medicine; we would rather not wait until something happens.... This is also in accordance with Utah law."

Utah law requires all children under age five to be properly restrained while in a motor vehicle driven by that parent or legal guardian who is a resident of Utah.

Rubber sources studied

By PAUL GAPPMEYER

University Staff Writer

With increasing political unrest in Central and South America, scientists in the United States are trying to find ways to produce rubber and thus become self-sufficient if friendly ties with these countries are severed.

"Natural rubber imported to the United States comes from rubber trees that grow in tropical areas in South and Central America," said Tim Davis, assistant professor of horticulture at BYU.

Natural rubber is used in a variety of products in this country, he said.

Davis, with the help of Dr. Narendra Sankha and Dr. Abha Upadhyaya from the University of Jodhpur in Jodhpur, India, is conducting research on propagation of a plant called Rabbit Brush.

Davis, Sankha and Upadhyaya's research is part of a research project of Dr. Darrell Webber from the Botany and Range Science Department at BYU, sponsored by a grant from the National Science Foundation.

"Rabbit Brush is a plant that is high in rubber content and can be grown in very unpleasant soil conditions," Davis said. "We are trying to find a way to produce a suitable hybrid for crop raising."

"In the beginning we were having a hard time reproducing the plant in the laboratory using standard techniques," he said.

"We would cut off a shoot and put it in soil and keep it in a greenhouse and hope the plant would take root," Davis said. "But every time we tried this the plants rotted."

"We then turned to cloning tissue cultures which proved successful," he said.

New methods of producing rubber, through the use of the Rabbit Brush plant, are being studied by assistant professor of horticulture Tim Davis and his associates, Drs. Narendra Sankha and Abha Upadhyaya.

By taking a small part of the plant and placing it in a sterile culture they were able to reproduce the plant from the genetic information in the cells of the parent plant. Davis said, "If we could clone a plant we could clone a plant the daughter plants will carry the exact same genetic information as the parent plant."

"If you were to find a type of hybrid that would produce an extremely high content of rubber out in the wild, we could clone it and get thousands of daughter plants."

If the plant is cloned repeatedly, many exact duplicate plants could be planted, resulting in a huge crop of high content rubber. "It would be a good, useful plant to cultivate in this way."

He said three types of clones are made in the laboratory — plants with shoots, plants with roots and plants that have not determined whether to have shoots or roots, which are known as a "callus."

Anti-abortion activists wield video in battle for legislation

WASHINGTON (AP) — Anti-abortion activists have carted a controversial videotape to Capitol Hill, calling its images of an actual abortion a powerful new weapon in their battle for legislation outlawing the practice.

"The Silent Scream," which has been circulating since late last year, was praised by President Reagan during his January remarks to thousands of abortion protesters.

Critics, though, are crying fraud. They say the tape's powerful impact comes not from its images, which often are difficult to make out, but from its dramatic narration. They also say that the narration is highly misleading in claiming a 12-week-old fetus feels pain, has human functions "indistinguishable from ours" and can even sense approaching danger.

The producer and narrator of "The Silent Scream" displayed more than 100 copies of the videotape Tuesday at a gathering of like-minded activists on the White House grounds.

Dr. Bernard Nathanson, the New York abortionist turned anti-abortion crusader who made the videotape, said copies would be given to every member of Congress and the Supreme Court.

Their reaction, he said, would be "a measure of this society."

Ford Co. motors to record profit

DETROIT (AP) — Ford Motor Co. on Wednesday reported a fourth-quarter profit of $721 million, pushing 1984 earnings to a company record $2.9 billion.

That will help put the 1984 profits of Detroit's Big Three carmakers to nearly $10 billion for last year. General Motors Corp. will report a record year-end profit of $3.5 billion. Chrysler Corp. is expected to report a record profit of about $2.4 billion when it releases its figures Thursday.

Ford's fourth-quarter profit was down 5 percent from last year's $781 million. The No. 2 automaker attributed that to a bigger tax bill, reflecting the general expiration of tax credits earned by the industry during the four-year sales slump that ended in 1983.

The previous record year for Ford was 1983, when it turned a $1.87 billion profit.

New recruits sign with football team

By MARK CARPENTER

Asst. Sports Editor

The 1984 NCAA National Champions in football have signed 13 freshmen and three junior college players to help replace the 20 seniors who graduated from the squad.

"It's that day ... that we work for each year," said BYU head coach LaVell Edwards at a Cougar Club luncheon Wednesday, the deadline for high school football players to sign letters of intent.

"We had a very typical recruiting year," he added. "We got stronger in some areas and added to our overall depth."

The Cougars lost four offensive linemen and three defensive linemen to graduation, and Edwards said some of the new recruits would help fill those vacancies.

"We helped ourselves with height in linemen," said Edwards. "A number of the linemen recruited by us are 6-foot-4 to 6-foot-6 category."

Among the linemen Edwards was referring to were the three junior college transfers — Jason Buek, Steve Kaufusi and Mike Turner — who all figure to be factors in the 1985 season.

Buek, from St. Anthony, Idaho, is a 6-6 defensive lineman who played for two years at Rich College and weighs in at 225 pounds. Kaufusi and Turner are both from Salt Lake City, and both played at Dixie College before signing with the Cougars.

Kaufusi is a 6-5, 230-pound defensive lineman while Turner stands 6-6, weighs in at 275 and plays on the offensive line.

The BYU coaches also landed some big linemen from the high school ranks. These include 6-5, 250-pound Warren Wheat from Phoenix; Robert Lapuano (6-5, 255) and Brian May (6-6, 230) from Salt Lake City and Frisco Multitale (6-4, 235) from Spanish Fork.

One lineman the Cougars missed out on signing was John Hermann, the younger brother of former BYU defensive end Jim Hermann. Despite the example of his brother, John decided to sign with Michigan because the Big Ten school is closer to his home in Wisconsin.

Ueberrroth policy on cable changes

By The Associated Press

Things sometimes change fast in business.

Two months ago Commissioner Peter Ueberrroth was pushing the danger of television superstations, cable outlets which beam games all over the map while paying — perish the thought — absolutely nothing for the privilege. He called them "insidious" and suggested that their invasion of otherwise healthy markets could "tear baseball apart."

It was easy to understand, then, why the application of Gaylord Broadcasting to purchase a chunk of the Texas Rangers was greeted with something less than enthusiasm by his office at that time. Five American League owners, apparently taking the lead from the commissioner, voted against the transaction in January and defeated it.

A month later ... surprise, surprise ... Ueberrroth invoked his "best interests of baseball" powers for the first time, overturned the vote and approved Gaylord's purchase of 28 percent of the Rangers.

"What happened? Where did we miss something here? When did Gaylord Broadcasting replace its bad guy, superstition black hats with white ones? Why the change of mind?"

"It was no change of mind," Ueberrroth explained. "The superstitions remain a major problem for baseball. You have to ask, though, what are the solutions? They can be economic, litigious or governmental. We seek an answer."

This is not a bad idea since additional income is always nice and certainly looks considerably better on the balance sheet than the attorney's fee and court costs that lawsuits routinely produce.

When Ted Turner, king of the superstations and owner of the Atlanta Braves, applied to buy 20 percent of his fellow owners over the next five years for the right to broadcast Braves' games into their territories, it put the issue in a new light. George Steinbrenner's New York Yankees, with smaller superstition exposure via WPIX than Turner's WTBS empire, also requested a monetary settlement, and the Yankees' bid didn't seem quite so terrible.

"The Turner agreement, the PIX agreement, the Gaylord agreement give baseball, for the first time in its dealing with the superstitions, some control of our own destiny," Ueberrroth said.

"We've chosen not to go the historical route of lawsuits but to work out the best solutions we can for more control as an entity."

And, it should be noted, for more bucks, too.

Don't for a moment lump Gaylord's seven television stations with Turner's farflung network. They are not in the same league.

Y women will battle NMS for first place

GORDON TREADWAY

University Sports Writer

The BYU women's basketball team goes on the road to face New Mexico tonight and league-leading New Mexico State Saturday in two High Country Athletic Conference matchups that will have a major impact on the league standings.

NMS finds itself at the top of the HCAC standings for the first time since the conference has been in existence. The Cougars are second, a half-game behind.

BYU is hoping for more success over the weekend in the state of New Mexico than the BYU men's team had last week. The women cagers haven't been exactly dynamic on the road this season, but the Cougars and the Rams aren't the best neighborhoods to try reversing a trend.

In the past 18 months, the Cougars have lost 14 games, 10 of them coming on foreign courts. BYU's last conference loss came against the Lobos last season 83-79.

In spite of his team's poor performance on the road, BYU coach Courtney Leishman seems positive.

"Everybody is healthy, so we're anxious to play both schools. They're tough, but we're playing well right now."

BYU women's coach Courtney Leishman

tive about his chances for a second consecutive HCAC championship, especially with his Cougars starting to come together as a team.

"Everybody is healthy, so we're anxious to play both schools," Leishman said. "They're tough, but we're playing well right now."

The Cougars are really playing well defensively. Wins last weekend, when the Cougars' tight zone helped propel them to a two-game sweep of in-state rivals Utah and Utah State.

One aspect of the Cougars' play that Leishman has been pleased with all season exploded during last weekend's contests — the play of senior forward Cindy Battistone. Battistone scored 50 points in the two games, 36 in the Cougars' 87-65 rout of Utah.

Battistone, who hails from Santa Barbara, Calif., did more than merely light up the scoreboard with her scoring — she also added 51 rebounds (20 against USU), shot 18 for 20 from the free-throw line, contributed 13 assists and grabbed four steals. Her play earned her HCAC Player of the Week.

"Cindy is a coach's dream," Leishman said. She is the kind of player a team can go to when the pressure is on and have her produce. If that's the case, then Battistone is going to have to be ready to produce this weekend because the pressure is definitely on.

If Battistone plays well the Cougars could be on their way to putting some ground between them and the rest of the league, but there is another player Leishman must have perform well for BYU to win — center Tressa Spaulding.

Spaulding is averaging nearly 20 points every time she puts on her uniform, but it's her rebounding that is the big key for BYU. At 6-foot-7, she gets plenty of opportunities to clean the boards, if her biggest nemesis, the referees, leave her alone.

When Spaulding isn't foul trouble she dominates, but when the whistles have been blowing and the fingers pointed at her, the Cougars lose a big advantage in height and talent.

The Cougar coach compares Spaulding's foul problems with that of another giant basketball player who plays in the Beehive state, Mark Eaton of the Utah Jazz.

"A lot of foul calls aren't really fouls," said Leishman. "The referees aren't used to seeing a girl tall and when they see her block a shot or something they assume that she couldn't have done it without fouling. Her problem is exactly like Mark Eaton's."

New Mexico comes into tonight's game in the same situation Utah had last week when it met the Cougars. With a conference record of 3-2, a loss to BYU and an championship hopes the Lobos might be paying for.

The Lobos sport three players with almost identical scoring averages, one example of UNM's balance on the court. Forwards Yvonne McKinnon and Alison Foote average 15.4 and 15.7 points per game, respectively, with another forward, Winfried Foster, adding 14.4 ppg of her own.

The Roadrunners of NMS are running faster than they've ever run before. With a seven-game winning streak and a 5-0 HCAC record, the Roadrunners find themselves in a strange position — first place.

BYU coach Courtney Leishman seems positive about his chances for a second consecutive HCAC championship, especially with his Cougars starting to come together as a team.

The last time BYU's basketball team met the Rams from Colorado State the Cougars were riding a three-game winning streak and wrapping up a five-game road trip with the game in Ft. Collins, Colo.

The Cougars came out on top that night as a shot by center Mike Gray for the Rams was off target. The CSU loss forced the Rams out of the WAC lead, and they have been going down hill ever since. The Rams have won only one conference game since the meeting with BYU and culminated their decline with a loss to Hawaii last Saturday.

After falling to the Rainbows, CSU coach Ray McAndrews said, "Our guys were looking around during the warmups. Our whole game was a joke. Our kids just don't want to win very bad."

The Rams have fallen from the top of the WAC heap to seventh place just ahead of Hawaii and Air Force. This could partially be due to a schedule that has the Rams facing four of the top five teams and continuing that road swing against BYU Thursday night and Utah Saturday.

Carrying a six-game losing streak into the Marriott Center, the Rams could be ready to drop the Cougars even on BYU's home court. "They're hungry for a win," said BYU coach Ladell Andersen. "We're going to have to be right to beat them."

The Cougars, on the other hand, are sitting at fourth place in the conference standings and want to improve on that position in order to secure a bye in the first round of the WAC post-season tournament.

With a 10-4 record, BYU is a good outfit in Hawaii. The Cougars return to the Marriott Center after two road losses that could have been — and probably should have been — two road wins. After blowing a 6-point lead in the final minute of the game against New Mexico for a two-point loss, BYU lost to Texas-El Paso in three overtimes after most of the starters had either fouled out or were ejected after a bench-clearing brawl. The two losses sharply contrasted to the 10-4 record for the Cougars against Hawaii and CSU in similar situations.

CSU has an experienced team which usually starts four seniors and a junior. The Rams are led by forward Rich Strong and guard Todd Benn, who scored 22 and 16 points, respectively, against the Cougars in the last meeting of the two schools.

The Rams have also had strong performances from Mick DeLavalade, Andy Johansen and Gray in some games this year.

"Against experienced teams like Air Force, Colorado State, UTEP and Hawaii you'd better play well to beat them," Andersen said, adding that his team has gained experience during the season also. "We're more experienced now than we were when the season began. We're more of a veteran team."

"Our team, as I look at the WAC, has probably progressed more than any team in the league," he said.

The Cougars will attempt to counter CSU's guard-forward attack of Benn and Strong with the guard-forward combination of Tim Saarainen, the WAC's leading scorer, and Scott Sinek, one of the conference's top defensive players. Saarainen boosted his season scoring average to 24 points per game by scoring 31 against UTEP and 41 against New Mexico last week.

Sinek's efforts in the closing minutes of the CSU game in Colorado kept the hot-shooting Benn from getting the ball for a final shot, preserving the victory for BYU. The senior point guard also scored 16 points against CSU and currently stands with a 10.0 scoring average.

The Cougars also received offensive punch from Andy Toolson as the freshman scored 21 points, including four consecutive free throws to tie the game in the last seconds. Toolson played most of the game in an unfamiliar position, matched against a larger player most of the game.

Cougar netters win two in California dual meets

The BYU men's tennis team is enjoying two things this week — sunny San Diego weather and victories.

The Cougars have been in southern California since Monday and haven't had anything happen to them yet. On Monday the Cougars swept Hawaii, 9-0, and Tuesday they bettered the University of San Diego, 6-3, behind the play of Rob Furtach.

The two dual meet victories lifted BYU's season record to 6-1.

Against the talented USD squad, the Cougars got wins in singles from Fought, Greg Hayward, Robert Garbell, Rich Boerne and Derk Pardoe. It doubles the Cougars dominated as well with victories by the teams of David Harkness-Garbell and Hayward-Fought.

The Cougars will remain in California all this week to compete in the San Diego Intercollegiate.

Despite self-destruction tourney hope still remains

SPORTS LINE

In basketball only a handful of plays can be considered crucial enough to change a team's destiny for the worst. Of the handful, BYU owns several.

There are possibly several key games or plays that changed the complexion of the 1984-85 BYU basketball season, but the ones that were the most devastating had to be the two games against New Mexico, the home contest against San Diego State and the road trip to Edgemont.

Before the latest road trip into the southern reaches of the WAC the Cougars were sitting in great shape to win the conference championship. They were tied for the No. 2 spot even after losing for the second time to San Diego State.

The Cougars controlled their own destiny and had a chance to tie UTEP for first place if they could beat New Mexico and the Miners.

It was probably the most crucial of trips if BYU was to have any chance at all to win the conference crown.

Against New Mexico everything seemed to go in BYU's favor — until the end of the game. The Cougars' had their eighth win of the season already wrapped up until their self-destruct button was pushed.

Within a minute the Cougars lost a six-point lead and fell out of second place. Then, hoping to salvage the road swing at least one win BYU went to Edgemont and lost a number to the win column, but once again the Cougars wound up on the lower side of the point total.

It was a crucial game, but once again BYU lost a contest it should've won and virtually had won. Now the best the Cougars can really even hope for is fourth place in the conference with a decent shot at third.

Since each of the top four teams in the conference have at least one game remaining the Cougars must win all four if they are to finish that high in the standings.

It's conceivable UTEP could lose all four of its remaining WAC games — but not likely. San Diego State could drop the rest of its league games but don't count on it. The team the Cougars have the best chance of overcoming in the WAC race is New Mexico.

The Cougars are only one game ahead of BYU at 8-4, but must play both Texas-El Paso and SDSU. If New Mexico loses two of its four WAC games and

Cougar grapplers will battle Aggies in last dual meet

The BYU wrestling team travels to Logan Friday to meet intrastate rival Utah State in its last dual appearance of the season.

The 10-5 Cougars are hoping their fast-improving "push" in the heavier weight divisions will give them the necessary edge to beat the Aggies, BYU coach Alan Albright said.

Ron Hansen, BYU's 190-pound wrestler, and Henry Williams, the Cougar heavyweight, have helped BYU tally an impressive string of victories.

Overall, Hansen and Williams have combined for 37 wins. Hansen has 10 titles and Williams and was a two-time All-American. He is starting to come into his own, Albright said. "It was just a matter of time, but he is really starting to come on."

Williams, on the other hand, has been a consistent performer all season. The senior wrestler has a 20-5 record, 11 of his wins coming via pins. Against Utah State he will meet undefeated Mountain Intercollegiate Wrestling champion John Scheible.

In lighter weight divisions, Chris Brown returns to the 118-pound division for the first time in three weeks, and 142-pound Chris Humphreys puts his 17-2 record on the line.

"There will be stiff competition in nearly all of the weight classes. We can expect a real dogfight," Albright said.

Rookie named MVP in NHL's All-Star game

CALGARY, Alberta (AP) — Mario Lemieux found the perfect proving ground for his considerable hockey talents Tuesday night as he led the Prince of Wales Conference to a 6-4 victory over the Clarence Campbell Conference in the National Hockey League All-Star Game.

Lemieux, the top pick in last summer's draft and the leading rookie scorer this season, scored two goals and set up another as he earned the Most Valuable Player award in the contest.

"I was nervous, and I didn't know what to expect," said the 19-year-old center of the Pittsburgh Penguins who was the most touted draftee in more than a decade. "I wanted to show I belonged in such a game with all these great stars."

"It's a very good feeling to win the MVP when you are up against guys like (Wayne) Gretzky and (Mike) Bossy. You expect those guys to win the MVP," he said.

Lemieux, who scored 133 goals for the junior league Laval Voisins in 1983-84, certainly established himself as an offensive force and left no doubt that he deserved to be an All-Star.

the Cougars win all of theirs then BYU could end up in third place and with a much better placement in the post-season conference tournament.

For the Cougars to overtake UTEP, the Miners must lose all of their league games, while SDSU must lose at least three.

It may seem the rest of the regular season is worthless, but the outcome of the Cougars' remaining four games will be important because they will wind up in the WAC post-season tournament.

It could be a difference between playing three or four times in one week. If the Cougars finish third in the regular season then they will play three times, beginning on Wednesday March 6, otherwise they will play Monday, Wednesday, Friday.

Although the chances of hosting the conference tournament are about as good as clay is to rubber, Utah during February, the Cougars still have an opportunity to gain some momentum going into post-season play. If they can postpone the self-destruct mode they have a chance of finishing third and getting a good position in the tournament.

All hope is not lost. The Cougars still have a chance to win 20 games and reach the NCAA tournament, but they must play well enough in the conference tournament to do it.

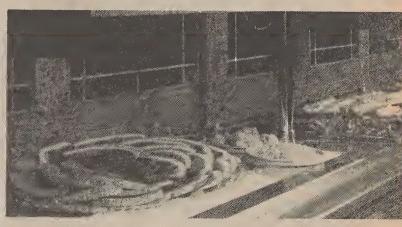

Let's just hope BYU is ahead by at least seven points with a minute left.

Royal pair gives a fantasy to a world in need of one

By ARLENE SHÜTT
University Staff Writer

A romantic Valentine's Day might have been a deciding factor for the world's most eligible bachelor. On Feb. 24, 1981, he gave up that title to announce his engagement to a kindergarten teacher 13 years his junior. Today, Prince Charles and Diana, the Princess of Wales, are the world's most-watched couple.

Before the storybook wedding of the Prince of Wales to Lady Diana Spencer there even took place, the world became enamored with "Shy Di." She was charming, young and "oh, so human" from her nibbled nails to her size 10 feet.

Unacquainted with publicity, Diana was frequently caught off guard with tousled hair or a clinging skirt. She kicked up quite a rumpus the day she forgot to wear a slip, and the press has never let her forget it.

Diana caused another stir when she made her first public appearance as the Prince's fiancee wearing a black strapless gown that drew "ooohs" and "ahhhhs" from around the world.

The designers of the gown, David and Elizabeth Emmanuel, were busy creating Diana's wedding gown with their drawings under lock and key. It was rumored that the gown would be a bit daring and maybe even pink.

The first glimpse of Diana's ivory taffeta wedding dress came when she and her father entered the glass coach on July 29, 1981, to join the procession to St. Paul's Cathedral for a wedding featuring more pomp and circumstance than even the most spectacular of American weddings.

Royal weddings are usually held in Westminster Abbey, but Prince Charles chose the roomier St. Paul's, allowing plenty of space for the 2,300 guests and 350 of an estimated 1,500 journalists covering the event.

Those participating in the extravaganza via satellite got up at 5 a.m. (EST) to see a live broadcast of the 11 a.m. (British time) ceremony. ABC and NBC carried the ceremony and related events as part of expanded programming.

Officiating at the traditional Church of England wedding ceremony was the Archbishop of Canterbury who echoed the feelings of people everywhere. "This is the stuff that dreams are made of."

The public only became more smitten with Diana when she mixed up the order of her husband's four names. The royal couple giggled as they viewed a videotape of the wedding.

After the honeymoon was over the press pursued the couple with a renewed vigor. Reports of "royal tiffs" and "blazing rows" appeared in numerous newspapers and tabloids. Diana was shaken by these reports, and the media promised in a "treaty with Buckingham Palace," which they generally honored, to avoid harassing the young princess.

The couple's first child and second in the line to the British throne, Prince William Arthur Philip Louis of Wales, was born on June 21, 1982.

Buckingham Palace made the official announcement within an hour of the birth to crowds of well-wishers who had gathered the night before.

Prince Charles announced that the royal baby was "in very good form, marvelous and looking more human-like by the minute."

Prince William, like his father, will grow up with the press, although his parents say they will try to provide as normal a life as possible. Like most children "Wills" is involved in mischief now and then. Members of the royal family have learned to hide their shoes and heirloom handkerchiefs due to the future king's obsession with flushing them down the toilet.

The couple's second son, Henry Charles Albert David, was born in September of last year. A beaming Prince Charles emerged from the hospital to be cheered by some 500 well-wishers who jostled to hear as he joked, "We've nearly got enough for a polo team."

Public Broadcasting Systems face creeping commercialism

NEW YORK (AP) — Mr. Whipple isn't squeezing the Chairman on "The Jewels and the Crown," and Mr. Rogers isn't stirring the sugar in the cotton on his sweater. But public TV has been uncovering new money sources that smack of creeping commercialism.

With funds for public television cut by the Reagan administration, the PBS airwaves are filled with soft-sell produced plugs, and some public stations are turning their studios into high-priced lecture halls.

"People who work in public TV and raise money have been trying an awful lot of things for a long time, but any time your back is against the wall, you work even harder," said Michael Soper, PBS' vice president for development.

During an experimental phase in the early 1980s that provoked much intense debate over commercialism, New York's public TV outlet, WNET, showed an American Express credit card with the TV.

catch phrase: "Don't leave home without it."

Lance Ozier, PBS' vice president for program administration and development, said that wouldn't be done these days, although new PBS guidelines do allow broadcasts to cite specific products and brand names.

He spoke of W.R. Grace, which stayed off public TV when it could be listed only as a former manufacturer. "But when we were allowed to mention Grace, Peacock Plant Food, they came on board," Ozier said. "That's $100,000 worth of underwriting that would have stayed out in the old days."

In April eight General Foods brands, including Oscar Mayer Bacon and Cool Whip Toppings, will underwrite a new PBS series, "The Sporting Life," and spearhead a non-donating drive. For each $100-in-purchase mailed in, General Foods will contribute 25 cents to public

President Reagan's first budget, for fiscal year 1982, cut PBS funding from the Carter administration-agreed $200 million to $177 million. Last year, Reagan vetoed two bills that would have authorized higher spending ceilings.

Since then, bipartisan congressional maneuvering has restored some of those cuts, and Reagan's proposed budget, introduced last week, calls for $150.5 million for PBS in fiscal year 1985, $159.5 million in 1986 and $166 million in 1987.

The PBS stations are pushing hard to find new financial outlets. Besides the liberalized rules on commercial underwriting, Soper says PBS stations are strengthening their relationship with members. One approach is using studios as lecture halls. On May 11 Gerard Nierenberg, whose lectures and writings on the art of negotiating have been used by hundreds of companies and the State Department, is scheduled to conduct a closed-circuit seminar at WNET.

Illness helps singer cope with son's death

NEW YORK (AP) — Singer Loretta Lynn said she believes the illness she suffered last July, at the time her oldest son died, was God's way of helping her cope.

Lynn, whose life was the basis for the movie "Coal Miner's Daughter," said in an interview in McCall's magazine that she had been suffering from a seizure.

"I think the seizure was God's way of saying he's helping me. He's really not letting my mind cope with it yet," the singer said in discussing the July 25 death of her son Jack Benny Lynn, 34.

"I had a dream the other night that my other son, Ernest, died," Lynn said. "He was dead and in a coffin, and he was 'OK.' I don't worry about Jack anymore. I've been there and I've talked to him, and he said he was fine. He said everything is OK, not to worry about him. I will see Jack. I know I will."

Customers egg-static over 15,226 omelettes

DALLAS (AP) —

How many ways can you prepare an omelette?

According to Roger Zingle, an official of a restaurant chain with headquarters here, an answer is at least 15,226 — and that's no egg aggregation.

That's the number of possible omelette combinations customers can order (15,226 if you count plain), said Zingle, vice president of the 100 T.G.I. Friday restaurants.

This mathematical enhancement of the egg menu is made possible by adding or subtracting in various combinations 45 potential ingredients on Friday's menu — including such items as alfalfa sprouts, avocado, cauliflower, guacamole, snow pea pods, turkey and water chestnuts.

For those always hungry for egg statistics, swallow this one in Calgary, Canada: In 1981 a 11.7-egg omelette was whipped up in a 10-by-30-foot pan to make the Guinness Book of Records. And at Disneyland, 217 two-egg omelettes were cooked in 30 minutes in 1979.

Though the Roman epicure Apicius created the "omelete," a dish of eggs and honey. It was the French who made the omelette a breakfast passion, Zingle noted. In 1974 French revolutionary and philosopher Condorcet stopped to eat a 12-egg omelette at Chez la Reine and was captured and jailed by Jacobins.

Other French omelette lovers were King Louis XV, Descartes and the Duke d'Orleans, who flipped a 12-Oreille omelette one day at the palace of Fountainbleau.

Mask Club offers members good experience, exposure

The BYU Mask Club not only offers acting and directing opportunities for students looking for theater experience, but it also provides entertainment productions each Thursday that are free to the public.

The club, which began in 1916, is the oldest on campus. It has hosted student directors Carol and Carolyn, and Carol Lynn Pearson.

"The Mask Club is a student director's workshop," according to Dr. Charles L. Metten, professor of theater and cinematic arts. "It also gives actors an opportunity to be seen by big directors." All aspects of the theater are involved from technicians to script writers.

The majority of scripts used are originals, and many of the plays are written by members of the

King Fahd's entourage wows staid Washington

WASHINGTON (AP) — It was the stuff of fairy tales: an Arabian king, a young prince, gifts of gold and jewels and enough symbols of wealth and power to capture even the attention of calloused official Washington.

Washington is jaded to power; dozens of presidents, prime ministers and heads of state revolve through the White House every year. But Saudi Arabian King Fahd's visit this week gave the capital city a glimpse of sheik chic, a look at one of the wealthiest and most exotic monarchies in the world.

Consider:

— The king's entourage booked the entire Hay-Adams Hotel for its five-day stay. The posh hotel's 165 rooms usually rent at a single rate of $135 to $235 a night.

— The king's gifts to President and Nancy Reagan were a gold amethyst-studded pitcher and tray set, a woven gold evening bag with Mrs. Reagan's initials in diamonds and a small enameled egg that opened to reveal the Saudi seal and the presidential seal surrounded by diamonds.

— The king's delegation included no women, a reflection of female submissiveness in Arabian society. And there was no alcohol, which is strictly forbidden in Islam.

— They're exotic — the flowing robes. They're people out of a different setting. America historically has been rather fascinated with Arabia," said one Washingtonian with extensive Arab dealings.

The desert kingdom, while not ranking among the world's largest countries, is one of the richest — its per capita income in 1983 was estimated at $14,117, compared to $12,830 in the United States.

playwriting class or by the directors themselves. "It's a great opportunity for hands on experience," Metten said. "The Mask Club is the lab for many theater classes."

"It's like a fever," said Jody Worden, a freshman Mask Club member from Globe, Ariz., majoring in mass communication. "Once you do it, you don't ever want to stop."

Students rehearse the productions from 6 a.m. to 8 a.m., six days a week, and show their work to audiences every Thursday at noon, 1 p.m. and 4 p.m.

"The Patient" and "The Telephone," which is an opera, will be presented today at noon and 1 p.m.; respectively. "Cast me for the Kissing Part," directed and written by Carl Bell, will be shown at 4 p.m.

OPINION

Students should not quit school until they are 18

It's a question that has come up in the Utah State Legislature before, and this year is no exception as legislators battle out a decision on the controversial issue: should high school students be allowed to quit school at age 16?

The compulsory education law in Utah at present says students must attend school until they are 18 years of age or until they graduate from high school. But a bill was passed last week in the House of Representatives to lower that age limit to 16. The bill is yet to come before the Senate.

UNIVERSE OPINION

Advocates of the bill feel that by lowering the compulsory age limit, teachers won't have to cope with the "problem students" who don't have an interest in continuing their education. Those who don't like school, disrupt classroom settings, and have disciplinary problems would be able to quit and give the students who want to stay in school a better learning environment.

But current law provides for students to drop out of school if officials feel they will not profit by furthering their education, and with their parent's permission. However, it is not an easy process; both the school district's superintendent and the school board must give approval for the dismissal.

Some say 16 and 17-year-olds are responsible enough to know whether they want to quit school or get a high school diploma. But do 16-year-olds really know what they want out of life? Do they see glamour in dropping out of school and trying to find a job?

Most teenagers haven't had experience in the working world and they might not realize how tough it is to get a job — even with a high school diploma, let alone without one. The job market won't tolerate "uneducated" people and those who can't find jobs are simply added to the unemployment statistics.

Those who do find jobs have to settle for minimum wages at best, and they probably have no chance of climbing up the financial ladder. By the time these "drop-outs" realize their mistake, it may be too late. It's hard to go back to school while working to feed a family, trying to pay off a car and getting the rent in by the first of each month.

Most school districts now offer night school for people who didn't finish high school as teenagers. This gives them a chance to graduate, and it is a worthwhile program. But if the compulsory age limit is to stay at 18, it could prevent many unknowing people from making the initial mistake that later takes them to night school.

The years an individual attends high school are important for several reasons. First, it teaches academic knowledge, which is essential if a person is planning to attend college.

Through a variety of classes students are required to take, such as English, history, science, and math, they not only learn about those subjects, but also about life in general and what the world has to offer them. Mathematics, for example, teaches a person how to solve problems in life (such as how to live on a budget and how to balance a checkbook), as well as how to solve algebraic problems on paper.

Second, the years prior to age 18 are an important interaction period for people to develop social skills. There is no better place for an individual to learn how to socially interact with others than in a school setting.

Teenagers should not be allowed to quit school without their parent's permission at age 16. It would shorten the growth period that is necessary to help our society build responsible, self-reliant adults.

U.S.'s Japanese WWII internment remembered on Valentine's Day

It's an established tradition in the U.S. that Feb. 14 is a day of lace-edged hearts and boxes of chocolates. But for some, Valentine's Day is still the anniversary of the decision that helped forge the key which was to lock more than 110,000 people of Japanese descent behind the barbed wire of American concentration camps.

On Feb. 14, 1942, Gen. John DeWitt of the U.S. Army recommended to the War Department that the military security of the Pacific Coast required the evacuation of all persons of Japanese ancestry. Five days later the President authorized the evacuation, and the following day the Secretary of War designated DeWitt as military commander for the procedure. A month later it began.

"There was neither pattern nor precedent for an understanding of this magnitude and character," DeWitt wrote in a report to the Chief of Staff, "and yet over a period of less than 90 operating days, 110,442 persons of Japanese ancestry were evacuated from the West Coast."

The removal of the Japanese from the restricted areas was indiscriminate and complete. At least 64 percent of them had been born in the United States and were, by law, American citizens. Some of them were World War I veterans, and others were the families of soldiers who were members of the U.S. Army. Even babies of Japanese descent were weeded out of orphanages.

They were sent from their homes, taking only what they could carry with them, to live in what were often crowded barracks, and in one case, horse stalls. They were fenced in and patrolled by military personnel, and the necessary facilities barely met minimum requirements.

In one camp in Arkansas, while the water supply was ample, tests showed constant contamination. The sewage plant had not been completed by the time the camp was filled, so raw sewage was being emptied into an open septic tank and was then chlorinated before being drained out of the camp. And the American people accepted it, because the phrase "military necessity" silenced all questioning.

The situation was greeted with incredulity and pain by the Japanese. "How can we expect to develop Americanization when (we) are put together with the stigma of disloyalty pointed at (us)?" wrote inmate of Tanforan, Charles Kikuchi. "The Japanese are known for their politeness and honesty, but if they stay here long, they certainly will degenerate."

Joe Kurihara, who fought for the United States in World War I, renounced his American citizenship and returned to Japan, saying, "This decision was not that of today or yesterday. It dates back to the day when General DeWitt ordered evacuation. It was confirmed when he flatly refused to listen even to the voices of the former World War I veterans, and it was doubly confirmed when I entered Manzanar (one of the camps). We, who had already proven our loyalty, should have been spared."

The camps were emptied three years after they were filled, and 20 years after it was determined that the evacuation had not been a military necessity after all.

The German and Russian concentration camps are also easily forgotten when we remember the horrors of the war. But Tanforan and Manzanar and their counterparts (Utah's own camp just south of Topaz Mountain near Delta) also existed, products of racist hysteria and abuse of government power, in a country that should have known better.

They need to be remembered — if only to prevent this happening again.

— Naomi Horne

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR:

Dune people at Y

Editor:

While the fire is still smoldering now another fire has broken out at BYU standardizing a topic that seems to be a favorite for letters to the editor, and rightly so, for it is our standards that make us unique in a world that is terribly un-unique. So what's my complaint?

Well, I'd like to speak up against the increasing "new wave" presented on campus, particularly the fruity duds who have cut their hair short like there are stand-me-downs from the planet Dune. And what about the dudes with earrings? The layered look is not only weird looking, but is highly feminine. Now I have nothing against:

people looking feminine, just as long as they are girls.

It's hard to understand why standards allows these femmi hairstyles and yet if a guy grows a beard he is immediately hounded because they symbolized rebellion. Now, beards have lost their rebellious tones and extreme new wave styles have replaced beards as a symbol of rebellion.

While I'm complaining I might as well mention the girls with the booted feet and all the other things that look like they are stand-me-downs from the planet Dune. And what about the dudes with earrings? The only men that I can think of associated with earrings are pirates, gypsies, motor cycle gangs, and gays; of which none are worth imitating.

Banyan out sooner

Editor:

Many students have raised concerns over the delivery date of the Banyan. In response to the obvious problem, a marketing research survey was conducted by Dr. Richard Kagel's Fall 1984 Marketing Research class. The students polled overwhelming requested winter semester delivery. Thus, the 1985 edition of the BYU Banyan will be available the last two weeks of school this semester.

The 1985 Banyan is a collection of high energy color photos which depict this year at BYU. We invite all BYU students to consider investing in this publication. We sincerely believe that this would be $12 well spent.

Neighboring interest

Editor:

Congratulations to Naomi Horne and The Universe for a well-written and timely article outlining cruise missile testing issues between Canada and the U.S.A.

The issue is not, as the editorial cartoon would suggest, that Canadians no longer feel safe as the practicability of a position as mere spectators to the arms race developments disappears. Canada has historically been highly active in efforts against the genuine threats to democracy that have appeared from time to time.

Rather, I believe that the vast majority of Canadians, though typically less vocal than dissenting organizations such as "Our Right to Disobey" — support a commitment to NATO such as the cruise missile exercises over Canadian soil under question. What does itok Canadians is how little Americans in general care to learn about their best friend to the north, or most other countries for that matter.

And when strategic cooperation is necessary, and Canadians are instructed that they really have no choice in the matter, since anyone can see that their country will become a buffer zone/battleground in the event of war, resentment is easily felt.

Cupid gives special interview about love and romance at Y

A scantily clad fellow startled The Universe staff Wednesday when he appeared in the newsroom. He was draped in only a red cloth with white hearts; he held a red bow, and slung a red quiver on his back.

After identifying himself as Cupid, he asked for the romance editor. When informed that such a position does not exist, he insisted he talk to someone who could relay his message to deprived and deranged romantics at BYU.

"BYU is my best market," he said. To insure a good spring crop, Cupid said he needed to relay some answers to frequently asked questions about dating and courtship. "I want to be sure BYU shaped pizza," Cupid quipped. While eating a heart-shaped pizza, Cupid asked:

Where can coeds find eligible men? — Forget about the wards, because the best looking guys are never in your own ward. The surprise spot is the Smith Fieldhouse track and basketball courts, especially on Friday and Saturday nights. (Which may prove 20 percent of the men do 80 percent of the dating.)

Do you Cougareat for breakfast — but not during lunchtime because it's too saturated with other hopefuls? — Other possibilities are the law school library, Tanner Building lobby and Kentucky Fried Chicken.

Where can guys find eligible coeds? — Anywhere.

What do BYU men find attractive in women? — They can't get enough of the girls with the up-to-date hairstyles for the normal girls on campus. BYU men are attracted to updated hair styles of gel and mouse — the stiffer the better. They also prefer original Forentza clothes and several pierced earrings on each ear. Men also like coeds who eat at the Cougarcat at noon, and spend at least 15 hours per week there (but not as a part-time job). Attractive girls also drink diet decaffeinated Coke, and keep their I.Q. lower than the guys they are dating.

A special reminder for girls: act like a California and never tell anyone you're from Idaho. What do BYU coeds find attractive in men?

— However, special, special preference is given to guys with hair — on the head and chest, last semester seniors and those beginning work with a $30,000 salary.

What is the best opening line? — The old standby — "Haven't I seen you somewhere before?" — still works; but do not mention the pre-existence. Work on the ego, such as, "Hey, is it fair for a guy to meet an attractive girl?" or "Has anyone ever said you're a cross between a general authority and Harrison Ford?" — Don't worry about the hair this semester, is "aren't you on the football team?"

What are the best activities for a first date? — The guys play something cheap and the coeds hope for something expensive (the attitude reverses for Preference).

Skin the cuff stuff — that went out with plain milkshakes and the first Star Wars. But, do plan something with food, the Mormon aversion to alcohol and tobacco. (Girls, remember to also eat before you go out, so you won't eat more than your date.)

A movie is also good, but it voids the need for the first date. Just talk about "What's your major?" and "What's your dog's name?" Just avoid the R-rated shows (Varsity Theater is a good bet, unless you can read lips.)

What if I'm a last semester senior, and still not engaged? — Have you considered graduate school? If you don't have the grades, then try out for the Love Connection.

Cupid grimed as he chomped on the Valentine sugar cookie with red and white sparkles atop pink frosting. "I could retire if all my stops were as easy as BYU," he said. "Students here shoot their own arrows."
